

ACHILL ORAL HISTORIES: INTERVIEWEE PACK

Disclaimer: The below documents are offered as no more than a guide to best practice and do not constitute formal legal advice. Please consult a solicitor if you require formal legal advice. While every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information brought together here from a wide variety of sources and experience the Oral History Network of Ireland cannot accept liability for any consequences which may result from the use of this information for any purpose. Please note that while many universities and institutions have required templates for this information there is often a need to discuss alterations to these in line with disciplinary best practice for oral history. Please do get in touch if you need further advice on this.

We would like to acknowledge the help and advice of the UK Oral History Society and the British Library's Oral History team whose freely available participation and recording agreements have been adapted here for an Irish context.

This pack contains: a summary of the aim of Achill Oral Histories, the participant consent sheet, the recording consent sheet, an overview of data protection and an interviewee summary sheet.

Project Aim

Achill Oral Histories is dedicated to the systematic recording and preservation of the life stories of the people of Achill Island past and present. These interviews will then be preserved as a permanent resource on the project's web site www.achilloralhistories.com Unless recorded and reserved, these stories will be forgotten or rewritten by others. Achill Oral Histories bridges this gap so that accounts of the past may be protected as recounted in people's own words.

What is Oral History?

Oral history is the gathering and recording of people's memories and opinions. It enables us to see the human side of historical events, rather than relying solely on books and records. It also allows us to challenge assumptions about our recent past by asking direct questions to people who lived through those times. Oral history is particularly valuable because we can seek out the views of all elements of society, including people that are often left out in general history books. There are challenges. People's memories can be flawed, or they may not feel able to talk openly about certain things. But in conjunction with other historical methods, oral history gives us a much richer understanding of our recent past. Each account is individual and told in the way the narrator

What happens during the oral history interview?

Dr Angela Maye-Banbury, Oral Historian and Lead Researcher and/or one of our Community Oral Historians will come to visit you (see appointment details overleaf). The interviewer will have a hand-held recorder which will be used to record the interview. You may also be invited to record your interview at Ashleam National School where the project is based. The interview should take place in a quiet room free from distractions if possible. You are welcome to have a family member or friend present during the recording.

The aim of the interview is to record your memories in your own words. Stories, anecdotes and asides are all welcome. The purpose of the recording is not to gain a formal history of the Achill life per se but to learn about your personal experiences of life in Achill as you have experienced and witnessed it yourself.

We are also hoping to collect photographs and documentation relating to the life in Achill over the years. This material does not need to be given permanently to the project (unless you wish to do so). We are happy to take it on short-term loan, copy it and return it to you. We will give full attribution to any material used. If you have any material that you think would be of interest to us, please do let us know.

What happens to your contribution?

In the short-term, your contribution will be stored on the project web site www.achilloralhistories.com and sections from it may be made accessible to the public. In the long-term we would hope that copies of the material would become available to researchers via a public archive, in public repositories such as libraries and other community archive points.

How will the material be used? The material collected may be used in the following ways:

- Public performance, lecture or talks.
- Use in publications, including print; audio or video cassettes, DVDs.
- Public reference purposes in libraries, museums and archives. o Use in schools, universities, colleges and other educational establishments, including use in a thesis, dissertation or similar research.
- Other creative endeavours such as short stories, novels and other outputs.
- Use on radio, television or social media.
- Use in apps for smartphones / tablets / laptops and computers. o Publication worldwide on the internet.

Permission to use your recordings:

Before we begin recording, you will need to read and agree to sign a participation agreement attached below. This only gives us permission to record the interview and not to do anything with it. After the interview you will be asked to sign a recording agreement also attached below. Signing this form means that you are allowing Achill Oral Histories to use your interview in the ways listed above. This also means that you are giving copyright of this material to Achill Oral Histories, on the understanding that it will not be used in a derogatory manner and that you will be correctly identified in all uses of it. If you have any questions about this, please do not hesitate to contact Achill Oral Histories in advance of your interview.

Data Protection Statement

This project is being led by Dr Angela Maye-Banbury. Your interview may be undertaken with Dr Maye-Banbury and/or one of our Community Oral Historians on behalf of Achill Oral Histories. In addition to the details listed above, you can also contact us at info@achilloralhistories.com to discuss aspects of your contribution to this project. As outlined within the documentation below we will store and use your personal contact details in accordance with the General Data Protection Regulation and the Data Protection Act, 2018.

We collect your personal data for the purpose of creating an archival collection that will facilitate historical research and inquiry for generations to come. This is permitted under Article 6 GDPR which allows us to collect data where processing is necessary for the performance of a task carried out in the public interest. When the interview is completed, you will be asked to sign a Recording Agreement (below) to give us permission to include your interview as part of our project archive. If you do so you are agreeing that we can permanently retain and securely store your personal contact details as part of the project. These details will not be shared with anyone unless we are obligated to do so for legal purposes, such as evidencing ownership or demonstrating a valid Agreement. Your personal data (address, email address, phone number) will only be used by the project team to follow up with you about issues relevant to the recording agreement, to seek clarification or further details about aspects of the recording and to update you if any of the project terms and conditions change significantly. If you sign the Recording Agreement below without restrictions, your named, recorded interview and photograph will be made available in the ways listed as a permanent resource for historical research now and in the future.

Under this legislation you have the following rights in respect of data processing – the right of access; the right of rectification; the right to restrict processing and the right to object. If you have concerns about your rights you can contact Dr Angela Maye-Banbury info@achilloralhistories.com if you are not satisfied with our response or believe we are not processing your personal data in accordance with the law, you can complain to the Irish Data Protection Commission. For more detail visit <https://www.dataprotection.ie/>.

The purpose of the participation agreement is to ensure that you are happy with all aspects of your participation in our project as outlined in the information leaflet you received. When you sign this form, you are agreeing to take part in a recorded interview and you are allowing us to store and make use of your responses and personal data now and in the future in order to administer and archive your interview. Signing this form does not give us any rights to publish or disseminate your responses.

After the interview we will ask you to complete a Recording Agreement to formally give us permission to use your recorded interview for the purposes of our research project, to make it accessible online and to archive it for future generations. It will also give us rights to publish or disseminate whole or stand-alone sections of your interview.

We will also complete an Interviewee Data Sheet for our own records. This will be stored by ourself in a safe data storage server.

Your Personal Data

New data protection legislation (the General Data Protection Regulation [GDPR] which came into effect on 25 May 2018, and its implementing legislation, the Data Protection Act 2018) has changed the way in which we inform you about how your personal data is stored and processed, and how you can get access to it.

What will we do with your responses?

If you agree to participate in our project a member of the project team will arrange a convenient time to meet you to record an interview with you. Audio recorders will be used. You will be named on the recording as the interviewee. By signing this form, you agree to participate in a recorded interview where you are identified. When the interview is complete, we will ask you to sign a Recording Agreement to allow us to use your responses in a range of different ways outlined on that form. If you wish to review your interview before signing the recording agreement, we will send you a copy of your interview to review and you can also request restrictions to the future uses of your interview at that point. You do not have to sign the recording agreement if you decide after the interview not to continue your participation in the project and even if you do you can still withdraw your interview up to 12 weeks after the recording has taken place. If you do withdraw, your response will be deleted in its entirety.

What we will do with your personal data on this form?

The data contained within this form will be held securely and not shared with anyone unless we are obligated to do so for legal purposes, such as evidencing ownership or demonstrating a valid Agreement. Your personal data will only be used by the project team to follow up with you about issues relevant to the recording agreement, to seek clarification or further details about aspects of the recording and to update you if any of the project terms and conditions change significantly.

You can withdraw from this project entirely by notifying us by email to Dr Angela Maye-Banbury info@achilloralhistories.com until the final date to withdraw from the project provided below. After this point, your interview will become part of the project archive and may be used in whole or in part in the ways outlined on the recording agreement.

This Agreement is made between you (“the project participant”, “I”, “the interviewee”) and Achill Oral Histories.
